Action Justification – Why do you recommend the above action?

This bill was originally introduced as a Governor's bill in 2022 at the request of the Division of Banking and Securities ("division"). The division has been working to modernize the Alaska Uniform Money Services Act ("Act") ("AS 06.55") for over five years and recommends that the Governor sign the bill to make it law.

In 2022, SB 238 and HB 408 were introduced as Governor's bills to update the regulation of money transmission. In 2023 and 2024, the legislation was introduced and sponsored again as Governor's bills through SB 84 and HB 86. In 2025 and 2026, SB 86 was introduced with an identical companion bill, HB 99, same language with minor edits at the request of industry. Senator Kiehl sponsored SB 86 and Representative Fields sponsored HB 99.

This bill is a generational update that modernizes the existing Act by utilizing a model law drafted in collaboration with industry, regulators, and the Conference of State Bank Supervisors ("CSBS"). Money transmission business activity, including virtual currency and mobile applications ("apps") like Venmo and Cash App, did not exist when the current law took effect.

SB 86 harmonizes Alaska law with 31 states who have adopted the model law in whole or in part. Five additional states including Alaska had legislation this session. Industry groups and the Alaska Bankers Association have submitted written support for this bill. Industry testified on behalf of it and requested that Alaska adopt the model law to reduce regulatory burden.

Most of the money transmission today in Alaska is conducted by mobile payments on a smartphone, and there is unprecedented growth in the use of virtual currency. These did not exist when the Legislature passed the current Act. The revisions update current law by regulating virtual currency, adopts a uniform set of rules to be business friendly and reduces regulatory burden on licensees, utilizes an online licensing portal, and allows flexibility to address new technology in the future.

SB 86 updates unclaimed property statutes to address virtual currency. This bill will support the goal of making Alaska “open for business”, allowing financial innovation, reducing regulatory burden while supporting the division’s mission to protect consumers.

What does this Bill do?

This bill is a generation update that includes language to modernize the Act and incorporates a model law by adopting pertinent sections of the Uniform Money Transmission Modernization Act (“Model Law”). Industry, regulators, and the Conference of State Bank Supervisors (“CSBS”) drafted the Model Law to recognize significant changes in the supervision of money service businesses, to reduce regulatory burden for licensees, and ensure consumer protections are in place. The bill would make Alaska law substantially similar to the 31 states that have already adopted the Model Law in whole or in part.

Alaska’s current Act went into effect in 2008 before internet-based business models, virtual currency, and smart phone payment apps were widely used. In 2008, money transmission was sending a wire transfer at the local grocery store or purchasing traveler’s checks at a bank. Today, online transactions are conducted using mobile financial apps and virtual currency such as Bitcoin are common means of exchanging and/or transferring payment or value. The bill is necessary to have the appropriate regulatory framework for financial innovation and to protect Alaskan consumers.

The bill will apply to money service businesses (MSB) also called money transmitters who move money such as wiring funds, mobile applications (such as Venmo, CashApp, Robinhood) traveler’s checks, stored value cards (such as a Visa card you load funds on), currency exchange, and the transmission of virtual currency to, from, or within Alaska.

The bill modernizes and updates the following:

1. Licensing - fully utilize the Nationwide Multistate Licensing System (NMLS or Registry). Give authority to the department to require fingerprints and background checks in NMLS on owners and control persons currently manually checked by staff averaging 130-190 hours a year. Over 90% of all states use the NMLS to streamline licensing MSBs and other financial industries. Utilizing NMLS fully will reduce regulatory burden for companies who have same requirements and system across the country. Provide regulatory authority to license and regulate virtual currency business activity in statute.

2. Consumer protection - eliminates the ability of a virtual currency exchange to claim an Alaskan's virtual currency as an asset of the business in a bankruptcy. Thousands of Alaskans lost millions of dollars from bankruptcies of virtual currency exchanges in 2023, this bill will prevent that from happening in a future bankruptcy.
3. Recordkeeping - increase from three years to five years to conform with the federal Bank Secrecy Act to retain transaction data and investigation documentation identified in suspicious activity reports.
4. Payroll processors - require licensure of large payroll processors giving the department authority to determine the appropriate volume threshold to require a license for a right sized approach to not burden small bookkeepers/accounting businesses, providing Alaska consumers protection through the drafting of regulations with a public comment period.
5. Unclaimed property - amends AS 34.45 by adding a new section to include virtual currency under unclaimed or abandoned property statutes and provides a definition for blockchain. Updating the authority of the Department of Revenue's Treasury Division.

This bill will modernize the supervision of money transmission including virtual currency. This fundamental shift has particularly benefited Alaskans because anywhere there is internet service, an Alaskan can connect their smartphone to the world of sending and receiving payments online. Too often Alaska's financial services statutes lag behind technological developments. This bill will place Alaska on par with other states.

Virtual currency transmission in Alaska grew 2,400% between 2019 and 2021. Virtual currency and mobile payment apps have fundamentally changed the financial services world. Money transmission in Alaska is at an all-time high and shows no signs of slowing down. The number of licensed companies continues to grow in Alaska with 189 companies licensed in calendar year 2025. In 2025, Alaskans conducted over 31 million transactions worth $7.9 billion and 29% of that or $2.2 billion was in virtual currency.

SB 86 contains a fiscal note and all funds in the fiscal note are DGF funds to support adding five new full-time positions for licensing, examination, and supervision of this industry. The division's receipts pay for operations. The division is self-supporting and had a budget of $5.4 million dollars for FY2026. Last year the division contributed over $19 million in revenue to the General Fund from licensing receipts, examinations, and civil penalties, and that amount will continue to grow.

Currently every licensee pays the same $1,000 renewal fee, whether they transmit zero dollars in Alaska or over a billion dollars each year. The division will draft regulations to change the fee structure by adopting "fee tiers" based on a formula of the total amount of money transmitted to, from, or within the state. There will be no additional cost to Alaska's consumers. Money transmitters do not charge customers any more or less based on where they live. The division is currently considering Ohio and Texas formulas for the fee assessment tiers. The regulations creating this tiered fee structure will go out for public comment. The tiered fee model will be designed to cover the cost to regulate the money transmission industry and will be the right fit for Alaska small businesses and not a barrier to entry.

Money transmission is a critical part of Alaska's economic engine. There is no restriction on what an Alaskan wishes to send or receive, U.S. dollars, pesos, bitcoin, etc. This bill ensures that money transmitters move Alaskan's money where and when it is supposed to and requires the licensee to hold like for like in permissible investments to ensure the consumer's funds are protected.

SB86 reduces regulatory burden, is business friendly, and allows innovation in the future which are priorities of Governor Dunleavy.
